

Seven Questions

TO INVITE GOD INTO YOUR WRITING THIS WEEK

As you ask these questions, do your best to hear the voice of God and write down what you hear. You may hear a single word in your mind, see a picture that you didn't expect, or God may tell you lots of things to write down. Don't limit how God is allowed to speak to you or expect Him to speak to you in the same way He speaks to someone else.

Date: _____

If I only accomplish one writing-related thing this week, Jesus, what do you want it to be?

What other writing stuff is important to you for me to work on this week?

What task do you want me to work on this week that's not related to my writing?

Is there anything on my list that's important to me that I'm not going to get done?

What are you doing in me this week?

What do you not want me to miss this week?

What else are you saying to me, Jesus?

At the end of the week, reflect on these questions. Now that you've seen how the week went, which answers that you heard made sense? What surprised you?

Which answers weren't helpful or didn't work out like you expected? Is that because you heard wrong or is it because you were imperfect or disobedient in applying what you heard?
